Delivered by leading experts in the field, the Professional Diploma of Women's Health program equips medical professionals with a comprehensive understanding of women's health issues commonly seen in primary care. As consultations with female patients account for over 56 per cent of primary care consultations in Australia, the gender-specific health needs of women are a significant part of day-to-day work in general practice. Exploring medical concerns pertinent to female patients, the program offers foundation to subspecialist knowledge in women's health issues and will enable you to provide high-demand services that meet your patients' needs.
